

Jeff Wacker

Jeff Wacker, an EDS Fellow, is vice president and chief technical officer for EDS' Global Industry Groups. The title EDS Fellow is awarded to the corporation's most innovative thought leaders in recognition of their exceptional achievements. As an EDS Fellow, Wacker helps to develop enterprisewide initiatives that shape the future of EDS. He has more than 27 years of business experience, most of which has been in applying advanced information technology (IT) capabilities for maximum business impact.

Wacker is also an IT-focused futurist for EDS. He is known for his innovative approach to identifying and applying emerging technologies to create differentiated value.

An accomplished speaker, Wacker delivers keynote addresses and workshops across the globe and was the focus of a recent NBC news segment on future technologies. He conducts seminars for global corporations, teaching them how to use emerging technologies to create and sustain competitive advantage. Wacker also is the EDS liaison to the MIT Media Lab and the Things-That-Think Consortium. He works with a wide variety of groups to transition innovation to productive application for companies across the financial, manufacturing, energy, government, transportation and energy industries.

Jeff Wacker earned a bachelor of science degree in computer science and a master of business administration degree from the University of Nebraska. An avid practitioner of organizational learning, Wacker graduated from the Sloan School of Business, Organizational Learning Center course on Leading Learning Communities. Wacker is a member of MIT's Society of Learning.
